

The Color Code

By Taylor Hartman, Ph. D.

A way to see Yourself,
and your Relationships
in Your Role as a Leader

RED

POWER

RED

- Power
- To look good
- To be right
- To be respected
- Approval

RED

Strengths

- Loyalty to task
- Committed
- Directed
- Logical
- Leadership
- Focused
- Proactive

Limitations

- Pride (arrogance)
- Insensitive
- Tactless
- Poor listener
- Rebellious
- Critical of others
- Impatient

To get along with a

RED

BLUE

Intimacy

BLUE

- Intimacy
- To be good (morally)
- To be understood
- To be appreciated
- Acceptance

BLUE

STRENGTHS

- Loyalty to people
- Committed
- Quality
- Sincere
- Honest
- Focused
- Moral conscience

LIMITATIONS

- Judgmental
- Self-righteous
- Easily depressed
- Controlling
- Unforgiving
- Suspicious
- Illogical

To get along with a

BLUE

WHITE

PEACE

WHITE

- Peace
- To feel good (inside)
- To be allowed their own space
- To be respected
- Acceptance

WHITE

STRENGTHS

- Tolerant
- Patience
- Relaxed
- Cooperation
- Understanding
- Balanced
- Obedient

LIMITATIONS

- Uncommitted
- Stubborn
- Dishonest
- Lazy
- Uninvolved
- Dependent
- Directionless

To get along with a

WHITE

YELLOW

FUN

YELLOW

- Fun
- To look good (socially)
- To be popular
- To be praised
- Approval

YELLOW

STRENGTHS

- Accepting
- Forgiving
- Friendly
- Optimistic
- Trusting
- Appreciative
- Receptive

LIMITATIONS

- Uncommitted
- Insensitive
- Obnoxious
- Irresponsible
- Rebellious
- Self-centered
- Permissive

To get along with a

YELLOW

Character

How to become your best

color

Character

- Character, not personality, is the predominant factor in ultimately determining the quality of our lives.
- Character is essentially anything we learn to think, feel or do that is initially unnatural and requires effort to develop.
- Character is reflected with the changes we make in our values and beliefs through our lives

Identifying Life Principles

- Every person can offer unique strengths to a relationship.
- Individuals with personal confidence feel little need for power plays with others
- People that like themselves find it easier to like and accept others than do those who feel inadequate
- When we spend energy belittling others and blocking their development, we limit ourselves from growing

Free Will

If free will were not the core of our very human existence, we would be subjected to the limitations of our innate personalities from birth.

Other humans influence our lives

We must continually ask ourselves:

- Who we do we seek as role models?
- Who may be looking to us as their model?